IT HAS made headlines all around the world for its amazing ability to slice strokes of a golfer's handicap.

Now Pro Golf IQ is stamping itself as a driving force in junior development as the next wave of Aussie stars turn to Dr Jason Gregg's audio masterpiece to eliminate their temperament downfalls.

So successful has the five-week training program been for many of the country's leading coaches, they are now recommending the 'miracle cure' to their students and not surprisingly, the results have been astounding.

Ask Hervey Bay's Pete Cherrett to describe the program's effectiveness and he'll struggle to find the adequate superlatives.

After slashing six strokes off his own handicap in a matter of weeks, Cherrett wrote a personal letter to his students introducing them to the program in a bid to give them the same results he achieved.

Several of his students took up the Pro Golf IQ challenge, including 12-year-old Connor Reeves.

A talented nine-handicapper with an array of shots most kids his age could only dare to dream, Reeves lacked consistency and control of his temperament, often letting one bad hole destroy the rest of his round. After taking his coach's advice, Reeves received his own copy of Pro Golf IQ and started his new weekly ritual in the comfort of his own home.

Listening to each audio program, as instructed, Reeves quickly developed a thirst for knowledge and an ability to control his thoughts, both on and off the course, and before he knew it he was producing the complete rounds – minus the temperament dramas of the past.

"The first thing Connor's parents noticed was how happy and relaxed he was around the house, all in a matter of weeks from when he started the program," Cherrett told Golfer Pacific.

"Regardless of whether he played to his high expectations or not, Connor was so at peace with his efforts when asked by his parents, whereas in the past he would have been moody and frustrated about his golf."

With his behaviour now in check, it was time for Reeves to use his Pro Golf IQ training in a tournament situation.

Enter the Under 12 School Sport Australia Championships. And as if on cue, Reeves walked out on the course and delivered what he had promised for so long – he went on to win the individual national title by a whopping five shots. That's an Australian champion at just 12 years of age.

"He's an incredible kid – he's got a great head on his shoulders and that's why he found Pro Golf IQ so easy to use," Cherrett said.

"As you can imagine, with Connor being our first ever Queensland and Australian champion at Hervey Bay, we have some very proud members.

"It must be said, though, Connor is the product of a lot of hard work from his main mentor and father, Scott, who has guided him to this point in his golf.

"But what I find amazing is Connor has had no professional instruction, other than what he has read and tried – which really says something about the power of Pro Golf IQ. It has helped mould a talented kid into the complete golfer – an Aussie champion."

Cherrett believes junior golf is entering its most exciting phase ever, simply by having easy access to the revolutionary Pro Golf IQ training program.

"It's something we've never been able to teach our kids in the past, mental preparation – it's frightening how good our juniors could be with this unique training aid," Cherrett said.

"I can only hope that all our Hervey Bay juniors take this program home and use it and if the Queensland junior squad gets hold of it, I have no doubt they could really dominate their opposition.

"What Pro Golf IQ has done for me that nothing else has been able to do, is harness all my emotion and thoughts and direct them to a place where they are better for me.

"By instilling this vital technique into our juniors in the early stages of their careers, we will produce more quality golfers and potentially save them thousands of dollars later in their careers by eliminating the need for any form of sports psychology."
